Greetings, Everybody!

Here is a good example to follow as Father Time flips over another page of his diary and takes us into a New Year. Smile, like June Vlasak, charming film queen, is doing. Forget 1932 with its hopes and disappointments, and crash into 1933 with a big, wide grin and the firm determination to find that corner around which prosperity has been hiding. Now all together: "Goodbye, 1932! Hello, 1933!"

Dolorous Dancer

Not even in the merry atmosphere of mirth and music does Buster Keaton allow any expression of what our Parisienne friends call joie de vivre to appear on his poker face. The famous, lugubrious screen comedian is shown dancing with Eileen Bramley, film actress, at the recent banquet, for film folk at Agua Caliente. Maybe the band was playing a funeral dirge.

FIGHT OVER BURIAL AIRED IN COURT HERE

Goodbred Family Tells of Dispute After Father's Death

At a hearing enlivened by clashes between the attorney representing the defendants and the prosecutor, in which the presiding justice three times ruled in favor of the prosecutor, six Philadelphians were held for a further hearing and a warrant was served upon the prosecutor, charging assault and battery.

The hearing involved those who were engaged in the dispute which took place at the residence of Charles Goodbred, Newportville, Monday evening. The argument ensued as the result of a dispute as to whether the father, Martin Goodbred, 70, who was found dead Monday, should be buried from Newportville or Philadelphia.

Charles Goodbred, Newportville, was the prosecutor and first witness. He told of his father's death and of notifying his brothers and sisters, Martin, Edward, Alice, Mrs. Helen McKinski, and Mrs. Elsie Hearing, all of Philadelphia.

According to Goodbred the Philadelphians along with John P. McElhone, came to his home Monday night. "They walked into the house, went into the room to see the body and then came out into the kitchen. I arranged chairs for them to sit down." Within a few minutes, according to the witness the argument started as to where the father's funeral should be held.

"Father had lived with me and made his home at Newportville and wanted to be buried from there," said Goodbred.

His brothers and sisters wanted the body taken to a Philadelphia undertaking establishment.

According to Goodbred, his wife, son and daughter-in-law, he was attacked in his own home by his brothers and sisters. Chairs were brought into play as weapons, windows broken and a general fight ensued. Panes of glass were also broken out of windows in the milk house, it is stated.

The Philadelphia group was represented by J. Leslie Kilcoyne while Goodbred acted as his own attorney.

Previous to the hearing before Justice Laughlin in the municipal building, here, efforts were made to settle the case. Goodbred was asked to fix the amount of damage done to his property. He gave this as $50. Attorney Kilcoyne and his clients refused to settle for this amount and a warrant was obtained from Justice James Guy charging Goodbred with assault and battery upon Mrs. McKinski.

After hearing a number of witnesses for both sides, Justice Laughlin continued the case until January 20. All were released upon signing their own bail bonds.

BLIND MAN

President Lincoln in an address a few days before his assassination made the following ominous augury:

"I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow. The money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the public is destroyed."

Had the martyred president lived a few more months he would have found that his country had more to fear from the concentration of political power in a few hands than from the concentration of money. While the corporations were putting money to work at the noble task of developing the country and giving it an unprecedented period of prosperity, certain potent politicians were retarding progress and promoting corruption.

President Wilson in the last days of his administration and life could have made the same direful prophecy. Corruption and prosperity made their usual post-war visitations.

Usually governments and peoples anticipate danger from the wrong direction. This depression came from sources to which the public had looked for permanent prosperity. For all his flaunted intelligence and acumen modern man is a poor blind fool in many respects.

AIR PILOTS ARE HUMAN

An examiner of pilots for one of the big air transport companies has made the "discovery" that aviators are human beings. He says debts, bill collectors and shrewish wives spoil a good pilot.

And why should pilots be different from other people? Debts, bill collectors and nagging wives lower the efficiency of any man whether he is on the high seas, on dry land or above the clouds. With such handicaps no man can keep his mind on his work. And if there is any job that demands the undivided attention of the engineer it is that of piloting a transport plane full of human freight.

Being an air pilot has its peculiar advantages over other professions and occupations when debts, collectors and wives pursue. The pilot has an escape denied to others, with the possible exception of deep-sea divers and steeple-jacks. There is no checking up on high-flying husbands as long as the government keeps the short-wave radio out of the kitchen.

There is still a large part of the population that looks upon the aviator as a superman or at least as different from the earthbound. This is just another of those illusions.

All that is needed to end divorce is a law requiring mates to be satisfied with what they deserve.

But if the man who wasn't sent across can get a pension, why not the man who registered and wasn't called?

It isn't a question of letting the child create its own emotional dynamo but of getting it to shut the darn thing off.

Silhouette Stressed in New Styles for Men

Broad Shoulders, Slender Waist and Leg-o-Mutton Sleeves Among Innovations Calculated to Make the Male "Clothes Conscious."

If you are in vogue in 1933 (that is, if your wardrobe includes a sample or two of the new model male garment) you may strut through the New Year looking like a big, lusty hero of the gridiron, even though you possess the chassis of a mere ping-pong player. For the styles for men, hot out of the minds of the fashion moguls, are so designed as to show to the best advantage, plus embellishment, the glorious masculine form. At the recent show, staged in New York by the International Association of Clothing Designers, some of the new models were displayed by male mannequins. In brief, the silhouette is the thing. The shoulders are broadened by some miracle of tailoring to the proportions of a Hercules, while the waist is pared down to the svelteness of a ballet-dancer. Above are a few of the new models. (A) The most striking of the models is the new golf suit of soft tweed. It is specially designed to give the maximum freedom of movement and air circulation. Note that no hose is worn. Instead, there are short socks, rolled to the ankle. (B) This model is intended for the young man who likes polo but can't afford to play. It is a polo coat with the wide shoulders and slender waist that generates the aura of athletic prowess. It features patch pockets, cuff sleeves and belted back. (C) The "Park Avenue" is the name of this pin-striped lounge suit of English worsted. It is of very soft construction with peaked lapels and no flaps. (D) This is the full-draped topcoat, lacking in the harsh ungraceful lines long associated with men's fashions. Note the flaps on the breast and cash pockets. It has half cuff on the sleeve and is finished in four buttons.

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

"I cannot see anyone this morning. I am busy. Who is it?" remarked Rev. Flemming testily.

"Mr. Wolfe, sir."

"Wolfe?"

"Yes, Dr. Threadgold's assistant."

Flemming went to his desk, hesitated, and closed his sermon book. "Show him in," he said.

The contrast between these two men was vividly marked that August morning, perhaps because the characteristics that differentiated them had swung to the uttermost extremes. Flemming, ponderous, stately, slow as to eyes and mouth, moved like a man whose heart was covered with fat, and who would be short of breath after climbing a hill. The lines of his face looked loose and flabby beside the keen purposefulness of Wolfe's profile. His big hand felt like a bundle of warm wool.

"Sit down, Mr. Wolfe. What can I do for you?"

Wolfe sat down with his back to the light.

"The matter is partly personal."

"Oh!"

"Dr. Threadgold and I have parted company, sir. In fact, we have quarrelled."

"I am sorry to hear that."

Robert Flemming did not appear surprised by the news. His eyes suggested that he was wondering how such a quarrel could concern him. Wolfe understood the look and answered it.

"It is possible that I shall have to leave Navestock. But before I go I have a kind of legacy to leave behind me."

"Oh! You have come to me about it?"

"Shall I explain?"

Wolfe leant forward with his elbows on his knees. He spoke slowly, watching Robert Flemming's face.

"I won't waste words, sir. I had not been a month in Navestock before I was compelled to realize the insanitary condition of the town. One is driven to hunt for causes. I had been taught this, and I began to make every investigation that I could. It was not long before I ran up against prejudice and opposition. Perhaps you will understand that, knowing Navestock as you do."

Flemming remained impassive, sitting well back in his chair.

"Well, Mr. Wolfe, go on."

"I grant that my enthusiasm may have seemed rather meddling, some and strenuous. Matters became unpleasant."

"So I have heard."

"I placed the results of my investigations in Dr. Threadgold's hands."

"You mean you considered him responsible?"

"He challenged it, sir."

"And what did he think of these records of yours?"

"He burned them, Mr. Flemming, burned them behind my back."

Flemming was not easily disturbed, but he sat up sharply, frowning, puzzled.

"You mean to say that Dr. Threadgold burned your papers?"

"That is a fact. At least, I have his word for it. I had had my dismissal. One thing I did not tell him. I have copies of all the papers that he burned. In burning them he destroyed my confidence, and my consideration."

Flemming's eyes met Wolfe's, and were held by them in a long and questioning stare. It was as though the rector looked through Wolfe's eyes into the soul within, and saw things there that disquieted him and filled him with something akin to dread.

"This is a very serious statement, Mr. Wolfe. Unless you are very sure of your conclusions—"

"They are facts, sir."

"Facts are elusive things."

"Are they, when you can smell them, see them, taste them, and touch them? I call these things facts."

Flemming got up, flicked back his coat-tails, and moved uneasily towards the mantelpiece. He picked up a pipe, opened his tobacco-jar, and began to fill the pipe, dropping shreds of tobacco upon the hearth-rug.

"What makes you so eager to set yourself up as a reformer?"

Wolfe's face hardened. The question suggested either some ulterior motive on his own part, or distinct moral dullness on the part of the man who asked it.

"I suppose it is a matter of conscience."

"Ah—perhaps so."

"I don't think that any further justification is needed."

He was watching Flemming, and saw a heavy flush go over his face. The rector was nettled. Men who have preached at congregations for thirty years are apt to feel irritated when laymen presume to answer back.

"Let us take your conscience for granted. I suppose you have some object in coming here to-day?"

"I want these facts recognized. I may not be here to watch the result. But I mean to have them made public before I go."

"Well, Mr. Wolfe, well?"

"I believe, sir, you are the chairman of the Navestock Board of Guardians. It occurred to me that you might be willing to use your authority in getting the insanitary condition of the town recognized."

Flemming gave Wolfe a frank and rather surprised stare over the bowl of his meerschaum pipe. He leant one elbow on the mantelpiece.

"My dear Mr. Wolfe, I make it a law never to meddle unasked in my parishioners' private affairs."

"But are these private affairs?"

"Certainly, in an indirect sense. It is not my business to go to my neighbours and suggest that they should clean out their stable-yards. Come, Mr. Wolfe, have a little more reason, a little more savoir faire. Changes are not brought about in this hectoring spirit."

"I am sorry, sir, but I'm afraid they are."

"I disagree with you."

"Then we must decide to disagree."

Wolfe took his hat from the table, stood a moment in thought, and then held out a hand to Robert Flemming.

"You are an older and more experienced man than I am, sir. What I have said I have said in all sincerity. Provided that a man has straight, I am ready to take his blows."

Flemming's hand came out with a certain hesitancy.

"I don't doubt your sincerity, Mr. Wolfe."

"Thank you."

Their hands fell apart.

"I will think over what you have said."

"Any data you may wish to examine—"

"Yes, yes. Come in again some day. By the way, when are you leaving?"

He glanced sharply at Wolfe, flushing like a man who realizes that he has said something that might be misunderstood.

"I do not mean to imply—"

"No, I did not take it that way."

"Well, come in again. Bring some of your papers, if you like."

And the two men parted. As for Robert Flemming, he got no farther, with that Sunday sermon.

Wolfe took the Moor Farm road, thinking some rather cynical thoughts, and growing less and less tempted to trouble himself further about Navestock town. Turning at the top of Beech Hill and looking back upon the town, he smiled at the idea of some modern Jonah dressing himself in skins, and running through the streets of Navestock, crying, "Woe, woe unto this town!" The prophet would be picked up and landed in the workhouse as a lunatic, or he might even find himself in Wannington jail. Men have to be reformed at the point of the pistol. Few of us can claim exemption from the law of force. We are not to be persuaded until we have been scared.

Someone saw him from the keeping-room window as he came up the stone path. And from the very way the man walked, Mary Mascall guessed that he had come with a purpose.

"What, walking to-day?"

She met him at the porch door, sleeves rolled up, and face ruddy, for she had been preserving fruit all the morning.

"Am I in the way?"

"No, no, come in. I shall be sitting down to dinner in ten minutes. And I am all by myself to-day."

Wolfe looked relieved, and Mary Mascall noticed it.

"Jess has gone to Grazely to a harvest-home. She won't be back till late."

"Then I'll come in."

Mary Mascall was no dullard. Wolfe had come to talk to her about something. She called her girl.

"Sally, set a place for Mr. Wolfe. And put the dishes on the table. You needn't wait on us."

The first thing Wolfe said when they were left alone was, "I have had my dismissal."

"I knew that the moment you came up the path."

"Did you?"

"Well, I felt pretty sure that it was that."

"Threadgold and I quarrelled. It was all about the condition of the town. Things could not have gone otherwise. I see that now. I have just come from a talk with Mr. Flemming."

Mrs. Mascall passed his plate. "Robert Flemming's a good man, but he's grown heavy in the saddle."

"That hits him exactly. What an eye you have!"

"I'm not so bad a judge of a man."

"I am glad of that. It is comfoundedly difficult for me in some ways. I want to stay on in Navestock and fight."

"That's you—all over. But—"

"But—?"

"What is the use, lad, of your going on all fours and running your head against the noodles of a lot of obstinate old sheep? That's what it would come to."

"You are not far wrong."

"I suppose you haven't much?"

"Forty pounds and my clothes."

"There—there! And I don't know of any decent man who could give you a mount. If you had something under you to start with, it would be different."

"FOR LACK OF KNOWLEDGE"
"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," were the sorrowful words spoken of God's Chosen People, the Israelites. But was this statement true only of the descendants of Jacob, or was it an eternal truth, applied to the one race? Those who have studied into history are inclined to believe the latter, and some, indeed, are asking whether it may not soon apply to our own nation, if a way be not found to prevent it.

If the people of the United States were fully informed of the reasons why certain individuals and groups were endeavoring to get rid of prohibition, do you think for one instant that they would allow themselves to be led astray on the subject? If they knew the hold of the liquor interests on the politics, the press, and the people during the years preceding the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment, do you believe that they would allow themselves to be thus hoodwinked again? If they were fully alive to the danger to themselves and their families in allowing to become legalized a traffic which—in the words of Lord Chesterfield more than a century and a half ago—is "only for the propagation of disease, the suppression of industry, and the destruction of mankind," one which is more deadly to the finest and best than to the less sensitive and less talented,—do you not suppose they would sooner die than allow it to befall?—(Adv.)

Beware of Colds NOW!

With Flu in the Air Colds Are Doubly Dangerous

Colds—always treacherous—are doubly dangerous now, with flu reported in many sections. They lower body strength and pave the way for flu and all its serious complications. Heed even the slightest snuffle as a danger signal. It's no time to take chances.

The safest course to follow is that outlined in Vicks Plan for better Control-of-Colds. In clinical tests last winter, Vicks Plan reduced the number and spread of colds by half!—cut their dangers and costs more than half! Full details of the plan are in each Vicks package. Briefly, it is this:

TO PREVENT MANY COLDS: At that first feeling of stuffiness or nasal irritation, snuffle or sneeze—Nature's usual warning that a cold is coming on—use Vicks Nose & Throat Drops, the new aid in preventing colds. Vicks Drops aid Nature in throwing off the infection that threatens. They prevent development of many colds.

TO END A COLD SOONER: If a cold has developed or strikes without warning, vigorous measures are necessary. At bed-time, apply Vicks VapoRub. Its direct double action—continuing through the night—brings quicker relief. During the day, use the convenient Vicks Nose Drops every few hours as needed. They add to comfort—help shorten the cold.

Follow Vicks Plan for Better CONTROL of Colds

SHAMROCKS SUNK AS GAELS WIN FIRST HALF

The Gaels captured the first half of the A. O. H. Basketball League by sinking the Shamrocks to the depths of a 40-37 score last night on the Hibernians' floor.

The winners took the lead at an early stage of the game and kept it throughout.

"Glee" Dougherty, versatile guard of the Gael quintet, stepped into the limelight with eight field goals and four fouls, a total of twenty points. "Jimmy" Dougherty, of the Shams, led his team in counting with twelve points. "Eddie" Roe scored ten points, all via the foul method.

The opening fray of the evening between the Celtics and the Columbians, proved to be very exciting from beginning to end, the Columbians finally emerging victorious by the close score of 25-24.

"Eddie" Taffe, guard of the Celtic contingent, lost an opportunity to send the game into an extra five minute period when he failed to score from the foul mark as the whistle blew ending the fracas.

"Ad" Roe was the Columbians' hero with thirteen of the twenty-five points. Joe Duffy led the losers with eleven points.

Playing a preliminary to the A. O. H. League game, Troop 2 of the Junior Catholic Daughters of America defeated Troop 3 by the decisive tabulation of 21-13. Betty McRoy and Francis Duffy excelled for their team, scoring sixteen points between them.

"Peg" Roarty and Daisy Ennis played best for Troop 3, scoring seven and four points, respectively.

WOMEN TO BE ADMITTED TO GAMES, MONDAY, FREE

Monday night will be Ladies' Night at the Italian Mutual Aid Hall where the games of the Bristol Basketball League are being played. All women escorted by men will be admitted to the games free of charge on that night.

In the opening game of the beginning of the new year, the Aces will play the Odd Fellows. Both of these clubs will attempt to start the new year right by winning their game. The Odd Fellows will be battling to finish out of the cellar and for a tie in the top of the second division. The Aces will be fighting to finish in third place and must win this fray to be assured of this.

The Odd Fellows will use this line-up in attempting to capture the fray: "Verdy" Watt, one of the high scorers of the league will jump center. D. Still and Harvey Cochrane will be the forwards with Manager "Jim" Rubincam and "Freddie" Hibbs at the guard post.

The Aces will line-up as follows: Ray Dorsey and Ad Roe, forwards; Tullo, center; Britton and Alta, guards.

Paterson Parchment Paper Company and the Knights of Columbus will be seen in action in the second fray scheduled for the evening. The Paterson five has won two games and lost four while the Knights have won one and dropped five so a victory for the Caseys will give them a chance to finish the season with the same percentage as the Paper Makers.

"Hun" Rodgers who stands fourth in the league's leading scorers will be at the forward post for the Parchment Company's team.

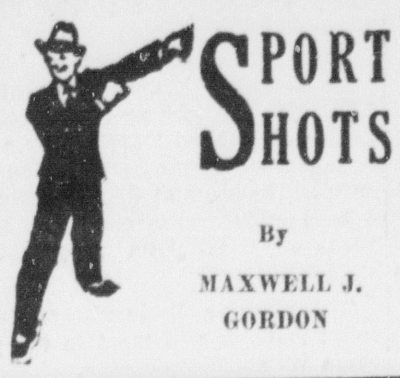

The opening tap-off will take place at eight o'clock sharp. Next Thursday night the deciding game of the first half will be played. The Hibernians will meet the Young Men's Association. In the first game on this night, the "grudge" battle between the Third Ward team and the Hawks will be played.

BETTER HANDWRITING

PHILADELPHIA.—Handwriting of pupils in the sixth and eighth grades of the Philadelphia elementary schools has improved by more than 800 per cent during the past eight years, John C. Kirk, director of commercial education for the Philadelphia Board of Education announced recently.

BAN PAPER HUNTS

SHANGHAI.—American and European sportsmen are disappointed over the decision of the Shanghai Hsien magistracy that the usual paper hunts over the farm land are forbidden this winter. This comes as the result of vigorous protests from farmers who disliked the idea of foreigners riding their ponies over the fields.

WE WERE talking with an elderly gentleman the other day who has been a resident of this town all his life, and found that he was quite a baseball fan in his younger days. He said: "I am familiar with that period in the town's history when baseball passed through that period of development. I remember John Callanan as pitcher of the old Keystone baseball club, and Tom Murray, its catcher. Those were the days before the pitcher's mask and chest protector were invented. Neither the infield or the outfield players wore gloves. A Mr. Dickie, who was partner in the manufacturing firm of Honard & Dickie, which occupied the old Keystone mill, now a part of the Warner Steel plant, was a pitcher of note and followed Callanan.

"I attended the Otter street school when 'Patchem' Flynn and 'Doc' Potts were also students. I remember when Flynn first mastered the curved ball. Two other boys, William K. Fine and John Tyrol learned how to throw the ball about the same time. In those days we played ball on the forge lot on Otter street, next to the school house lot, and on the lot where Leblond's lumber yard is now located, also on the lot across the street, known as the Bache lot.

"It was on these lots where Potts and Flynn reached a stage of development which made them eligible for the big Bristol team at that time. Bristol had a great team in those days. With Potts as catcher, Flynn and Coleman as pitchers, and Jersey McDonald at second, it was a team that the townspeople were proud of. Great rivalry existed between Bristol and Riverton in those days, and a contest between these teams excited the whole town. Many men of today can remember the pitching of Jack McPiedridge of the Riverton team.

"One day while the Bristol team was playing a visiting team, William K. Fine, who was formerly County Treasurer, and who resides on Wood street, was playing in left field for the home team. In attempting to throw a ball to the home plate to block a runner, he broke his arm, and the crack of the bone could be heard by the spectators around the home plate. This is enough for this time, but I will talk to you again." . . . Thanks, Old Timer.

Sunday afternoon at 2.30 the Third Ward A. C. will meet the White Elephants at Sullivan's field for the championship of the Junior Football League of Bristol.

TRICKS of MAGIC EXPLAINED by Will Lindhorst

TO MAKE COIN DISAPPEAR UNDER A GLASS

Prepare for this trick in this manner. A piece of paper about six inches square is used to place under the glass. Paste a piece of the same paper over the top of the glass and cut it off where it extends over the edge. Then make a cylinder of paper to fit over the entire glass, and appear before your audience. Lay the square piece of paper on a table, and place a coin upon it. Stand the glass, which is inverted and inside the cylinder, over the coin, remove the cylinder and the coin will have disappeared. Place the cylinder over the glass again, lift the glass from the table and the coin will reappear. The paper pasted on the glass covers the coin and cannot be detected because it is the same color as the paper on which the coin is placed.
